REPORT OF SCHOOL BOARD.

At the close of another successful year of school, the school board refers the people to the superintendent's report printed herewith for an account of the work accomplished in the schoolrooms, feeling assured that anyone reading it cannot fail to see the value of supervision, and also see that our schools have made decided improvement in the amount and quality of work done.

Besides the village schools we have maintained four mixed schools for thirty weeks.

At the beginning of the spring term it was found necessary to open a school at Blackwater, and this was maintained until nearly the close of the winter term, when most of the pupils moved from the district, causing the close of the school.

There has also been so large an attendance at the Contoocook grammar and primary schools that an assistant teacher has been employed throughout the year, giving one half of her time daily to each school. While this is not as satisfactory as an intermediate school, it seems the best that can be done under the present conditions. An instructor in music has also been employed in the village schools, whose work is proving a great benefit.

The matter of conveying pupils has been somewhat more difficult but generally satisfactory so far as reported to us. There have been covered vehicles provided on two of the longer routes, and it is hoped there may be more next year.

There have been more repairs than usual made on our schoolhouses the past year. The schoolhouse at Farrington

Corner (which, by our trade with the Concord district, we have to repair inside) has had its walls and ceiling repaired in a thorough and sanitary manner; the schoolhouse at Hopkinton village has been painted outside, its inner walls refinished, new arrangements for heating installed, and the outbuilding improved; but little repair work has been done at West Hopkinton, as a new schoolhouse was expected there the coming year.

There has been an annex built at Contoocook, according to plans voted for at the last school meeting, which gives a better way from the boiler-room in the basement, two ways for the children to enter and leave the schoolrooms, and, best of all, a safe and convenient means of escape in case of fire.

Before closing, we wish to urge parents and friends to a greater effort in visiting our schools and giving them encouragement by their presence and by kindly suggestions to both teachers and scholars.

For your loyal and hearty support in the past we extend our sincere thanks.

CHARLES H. PEASLEE,
MARSHALL DARRACH,
JOHN A. JONES.

School Board of Hopkinton.

SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT.

To the School Board of Hopkinton:

I herewith submit my third annual report as superintendent of schools of Hopkinton.

Since our schools are a state institution, the moving principle in all our work must be the preparation of boys and girls for citizenship. The teaching of the various subjects of the school curriculum is for the purpose of giving a mental equipment that will enable a boy or girl to grasp life's problems with vigorous honesty and courage.

This thought I have kept constantly before my own mind, and have striven to keep it always before the minds of the teachers. With this object in view, there is the absolute necessity for the honest performance of each day's tasks and duties. The acceptance of slovenly or half-done work will quickly establish a habit that will prove a serious handicap to a child through his life. This means that between teacher and pupil there must be entire honesty, frankness and fair dealing.

The teacher who comes before her class unprepared in her part of the work can never expect to get good work from her pupils. Or, if her work is not carried on with vigor, she cannot get good vigorous work from her pupils. If the work drifts along without definite plan and preparation, the children quickly catch the spirit and their work will be aimless and without results.

Hence, throughout the year I have had teachers work to a definite daily program, require clean, well prepared work and do their own work with at least a fair degree of vigor.

This has resulted in greater mental activity and therefore better work, and better habits of work on the part of the pupils.

But the schools must not be permitted to assume all rights or duties of establishing right habits in the children. The chief part of this work rightly belongs to the home and cannot be delegated to, or assumed by the school. The home and the school must co-operate for the best interests of the child.

If there is a spirit of fault-finding or unfriendly criticism on the part of either towards the other, the effect upon the children is disastrous. If the daily happenings of the schoolroom are carried home and misinterpreted, and discussed in the presence of the children, for them the usefulness of the school is impaired if not utterly ruined, and they are defrauded of their natural rights.

Or if a teacher is so injudicious as to speak slightly of the town, or of the people or the children among whom she is working, she thereby throws away her chances of doing her best work for these children.

Injudicious criticism of teacher by parent or of parent by teacher tends to destroy in the child that respect for authority, and that confidence in his natural guardians and mental guides which constitute two of the chief factors that make for good citizenship.

Unless parent and teacher work together in a friendly way for the proper training of the child, good results are impossible.

And may I here speak a word in behalf of the teacher? Her position is an exceedingly difficult one. She is usually a young girl, away from home and thrown among entire strangers, and this at a time in her life when she especially needs a mother's care and advice. It is very likely that she is homesick and taxed by her work to the utmost of her ability. She is nervous, and sensitive to the slightest glance that seems to her to indicate a criticism of her work, and the burden of this work has begun to weigh upon her and to almost crush her.

In her work she must be firm enough to control the restless, gentle enough to win the timid, calm enough to restrain the boisterous, animated enough to encourage the diffident and bashful—and these are merely the incidental qualifications which you expect her to have. Essentially, she must be a teacher—capable of imparting all kinds of knowledge and training to all kinds of children. Put yourself in her place before criticising too severely.

The work in the high school has been good. The chief feature here has been a marked improvement in the spirit of the school. There has grown up a spirit of loyalty to the school and a pride in its good order and work as well as in its progress and good name. This is resulting in a more painstaking application to work and a more thorough knowledge of the subjects studied.

The addition of about fifty volumes on ancient, English and United States history to the school library furnishes material for a much broader and more complete course in history than was before possible.

A heavy oak table and six bentwood chairs, presented by the High School Association, add very much to the appearance and convenience of the library corner of the assembly room.

The thanks of the school authorities and of the district are due the association for its thoughtful generosity in this matter.

There has always been a lack of co-ordination between the schools of the rural town and the life and occupation of its people. Instead of fitting its children for the life of the town, it has been educating them away from it, and the better the schools, the greater has been the extent to which this was true. Boys were fitted for college and a professional life, or for a mercantile career in the cities or large towns, and it was considered a discredit to the bright boy if he remained on the farm. This was an excellent thing for the city, bringing to it the vigorous, healthy manhood of the farm, with its fund of unlimited possibilities, but it was an exceedingly bad thing for the rural town, for it was thus sapped of a very large part of its best material. This has resulted in a very material lessening of the population of the town, and a consequent lessening of its strength and influence.

I believe the time has come when our high schools should be adapted to the needs of the community by which they are supported. There should be given the preparation for college required by those who wish to make use of such a course, but there should also be a course which will fit its pupils for life in the town. Cities are establishing technical and commercial schools, to fit their boys and girls for useful lives in the city, and it is now necessary for the rural towns to establish agricultural courses in their high schools in order to keep their population up to present strength.

Of the forty pupils now attending our high school, twenty-five are the children of farmers. While some of these may be best fitted by nature for professional or commercial or mechanical work in life, I do not believe it to be true of all or of nearly all. I believe the farm offers to-day the best opportunities for a majority of these children. But their interests are being drawn away from the farm instead of towards it. They are not being led to look at farming and farm life as desirable and the tendency will be for them to drift to the city.

This should not be, but it is a fact, and a condition which will continue unless the town will remedy the matter by establishing a good, well-equipped agricultural department in our high school. This would mean the annual expenditure of a few hundred dollars, but I believe it to be an investment which would bring an immense return to the town in improved farms, larger population and an increase in its taxable property.

Vacant farms and farms used as summer residences are not so valuable to a town as well-stocked, well-worked farms.

In the schools below the high the work is being brought closer to the program of studies and is being more closely graded so that practically the same work is being done in corresponding grades in all schools. In our schools where frequent changes of teachers occur this means a vast saving in time. Without such a program and such grading pupils were frequently taken over the same subject or parts of a subject again and again, while other subjects were slighted or entirely omitted as their importance or unimportance appealed to a particular teacher.

The work is being adapted to the age of the pupil. A child can learn the mechanics of reading better before he is eight years old than he can later. The essentials of language and the fundamental operations of arithmetic can be best learned before the age of eleven. During these years the memory is very active, and the child enjoys rapid drill work. He has little power of steady application to a subject, but must have frequent changes of work. His reasoning powers have not developed, and therefore the solving of puzzling problems, the attempt to give a thorough knowledge of any such subject as interest or mensuration, or the teaching of the science of grammar, is entirely out of place. This is the time for establishing habits by doing. His thinking is slow, but he must be doing something all the time. He cares nothing for abstract principles, but he is interested in doing the concrete examples, and from a large number of examples the abstract principles may be established. It is not until he is twelve to fifteen that he begins to reason from the abstract to the concrete. Many of the difficulties which upper grade and high school pupils eneounter in their work arise from the fact that they did not receive sufficient drill on those subjects of which they were capable, such as rapid addition, subtraction, etc., the writing of short stories and descriptions, while they were kept puzzling over work utterly beyond them, such as grammar and the difficult principles of arithmetic.

By adapting the work to the age of the pupils there has been a material improvement in all subjects. The essentials of reading, language and grammar, arithmetic, history, geography, writing, etc., are being emphasized and better taught, and the non-essentials are receiving less attention.

The most important changes made in text-books during the year were in geography and writing.

In geography the old books had become so badly worn that most of them were unfit for use, and the cost of exchanging for a new book was less than that of stocking up with the old. The book chosen is proving satisfactory.

A change in writing books means more or less of a change in the form and methods of writing, and therefore should be made only when the old system is proving entirely unsatisfactory. This was the case in our experience with the books and system in use and a change seemed imperative. After a careful study of the various systems the Spencerian was chosen, because the writing seemed to us to be most desirable in form, and the method followed seemed most in accord with the best principles. Pupils have shown marked improvement since the change.

Last year I was able to get special instruction in vocal music started in the high school and in the schools of the two villages. In the high school a beginning was made by starting a glee club, but by the end of the year the other pupils of the school showed enough interest to warrant making the work general this year.

In the other grades instruction in reading music and in song singing was started as an experiment. This was so successful that this year a supervisor was engaged to conduct the work in the schools of the two villages.

In the primary grades this work begins with the teaching of rote songs, and reading music. This has been in progress less than two years, and yet pupils in the third grade and above are able to sing, at sight, by note, simple exercises and the music of easy songs.

For mental training few, if any, subjects are of greater value than music, and the chance to learn its rudiments should be given to all pupils in our schools. The results so far have been excellent and justify the moderate expenditure made.

Again, I thank citizens, parents, school board and teachers for that co-operation and support which have contributed so materially to the progress made during the year.

Superintendent of Schools.
